SUMMARY

Some 500 articles have been written about gastroscopy. These papers have origin in 20 or more countries.

Three-fifths have come from the United States
One-fifth from Italy, France and Germany
One-tenth from Great Britain and Dominions
One-tenth from other countries (chiefly South American origin—Argentina, Brazil and Peru)

There was a sharp rise in interest in the thirties which suffered slightly during the war years, then a revival, which has not apparently lessened to a great extent.

Since 1939, the United States has led in number of articles. Quality is another question. About two-fifths of all the articles were devoted to apologies and evaluation of the procedure. These embraced indications, contradictions, dangers, critique. The articles were about equally divided as to United States or Foreign source. The number of papers on these topics diminished with the war, and have not regained their former prominence. Likewise, interest in gastritis per se seemed to reach a peak just prior to the war, but has since lost favor.

In all there were about 30 topics favored in these gastroscopic papers; other than those mentioned above the majority of the papers concerned: x-ray comparison studies, gastric cancer, gastric ulcer, gastroscopic series reviews, and instrument descriptions and modifications. Other than the usual diseases of the stomach, gastroscopic studies of the gastric mucosa were made in Pernicious Anemia, Syphilis, Hepatitis, Sprue, Alcoholism, Pregnancy, Duodenal Ulcer, Eczema, Rosacea, Tuberculosis, Schistosomiasis, Sea Sickness and Amoebiasis. Post-resection and post-vagotomy studies have been made.

Chief innovations have been color photography and the operating gastroscope.

Reports on fatalities have been few.

Reports on perforations (about 15) with recovery were common, and in the past few years, there have been a number of perforations with free air under the diaphragm that recovered without peritonitis, or that have been operated without evidence of a break in the gastric wall.

All in all, it seems that Gastroscopy interest is widespread, and believed to be useful as an adjunct to research as well as a useful tool in the Gastrointestinal Clinic.

No major change has taken place in the instrument (Wolf-Schindler); only modifications and additions have been effected.

ADDITIONAL REFERENCES ON GASTROSCOPY—1950 to 1954

Printed as a Supplement to the Issue of December 1950

The December, 1950 issue of the Bulletin of the American Gastroscopic Society contained a complete bibliography of all articles pertaining to gastroscopy up to that time. In order to bring this bibliography up to date, Mrs. Louise Roberts, Librarian of Doctors Hospital, Washington, D. C., has kindly compiled additional references as they were reported.

We hope you will clip this additional data to the previous issue so that your references will be complete to date.

If you are unable to locate this issue, it may be had by writing to the Editor.

ADDITIONAL REFERENCES ON GASTROSCOPY—1954-1956

Printed as Supplement II to the Issue of December 1950

The December, 1950 issue of the Bulletin of the American Gastroscopic Society and the Supplement published in 1954, contained a complete bibliography of all articles pertaining to gastroscopy up to that time. In order to bring this bibliography up to date, Mrs. Louise Roberts, Librarian of Doctors Hospital, Washington, D. C., has again kindly compiled additional references which have been obtained from the years 1954 to 1956.

We hope that this supplement may be added to the two original ones.

Additional copies of all issues may be obtained by writing to the Editor.

ADDITIONAL REFERENCES ON GASTROSCOPY — 1954 to 1960

Printed as Supplement No. 3 to the Issue of December 1950

The December, 1950 issue of the Bulletin of the American Gastroscopic Society contained a complete bibliography of all articles pertaining to gastroscopy up to that time. In order to bring this bibliography up to date, Mrs. Louise Roberts, Librarian of Doctors Hospital, Washington, D. C., has kindly compiled additional references as they were reported.

We hope you will clip this additional data to the previous issues so that your references will be complete to date.

If you are unable to locate these issues, they may be had by writing to the Editor.

These are given in alphabetical order and in years.

Also a Bibliography of References from Articles and case reports of THE BULLETIN OF THE AMERICAN GASTROSCOPIC SOCIETY (The Bulletin of Gastroscopy and Esophagoscopy) compiled in its entirety from the years 1949 to 1960.
